The basics of Arbitration

Defining

Arbitration is a form of dispute resolution. Arbitration is the private, judicial determination of a dispute, by an independent third party. An arbitration hearing may involve the use of an individual arbitrator or a tribunal. A tribunal may consist of any number of arbitrators though some legal systems insist on an odd number for obvious reasons of wishing to avoid a tie. One and three are the most common numbers of arbitrators. The disputing parties hand over their power to decide the dispute to the arbitrator(s). Arbitration is an alternative to court action (litigation), and generally, just as final and binding (unlike mediation, negotiation and conciliation which are non-binding).

Understanding the benefits

- The object of arbitration is to obtain a fair resolution of disputes by an impartial third party without unnecessary expense or delay.
- Parties should be free to agree how their disputes are resolved.
- Can be faster and less expensive than litigation.
- Any order passed by the arbitral tribunal for grant of interim measures shall be deemed to be an order of the Court for all purposes and shall be enforceable under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 in the same manner as if it were an order of the Court.
- Award (judgment) passed by Arbitral Tribunal shall be enforced, in accordance with the provision of Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (5 of 1908), in the same manner as it were a decree of the court.
- Provides finality, as decisions can be challenged or appealed only under very narrow circumstances.

Arbitration

New India's dispute resolution mechanism

Proceeding of arbitration is similar to court proceeding but less formal and time saving. Unlike a trial, the rules of CPC and Evidence Act are much more relaxed during arbitration proceeding.

Parties usually submit documents or other tangible items to the arbitrator and make oral arguments in favour of their case. Occasionally, witnesses for each party will testify about the case. After reviewing the presentation from both sides, the arbitrator will make a final, often binding decision, the decisions are usually regarded as final and can only be appealed in very limited circumstances. Unlike a trial, arbitration is a private procedure, so if you do not want your case in the public eye, the arbitration decision can be kept confidential.

Did you know?

The arbitration process can be modified by the parties. Parties may choose to arbitrate all or some of the issues involved in a dispute. If previous negotiations failed, or a mediation did not result in full settlement, parties may agree to arbitrate any remaining issues instead of going to court.

Parties may also agree to mediate their case before or on parallel track with, their arbitration. Mediation can be used to settle the dispute or simply narrow the issues. We can advise you on process options for your case and schedule an arbitration mediation without delaying the arbitration.
